

Nick Indrieri

Kate Baker

ITE English 3B

26 February 2013

Capital Punishment: We Need It

Death Row Inmates, they're the people society doesn't want but has to deal with because of current laws. They are the worst people you can imagine, people who would kill you just as fast as look at you, simply because they can. Its people like this that are the reason why I believe that the death sentence should be used and supported.

Every person in a federal facility with a life sentence costs Taxpayers an average of 1.5 million for everything required to keep them in prison. Every single person. The Federal Government spends more taxpayer dollars on State Prisons than they do on Education. We pay more money to keep murderers and criminals alive than we do for our children to get an education. That's just a fact. If capital punishment was allowed in more states these numbers would change dramatically.

A lot of people argue against the Death Penalty saying that it's against human nature to take another's life purposefully, but then again, doesn't that make the people we were going to kill inhuman? Killing someone for the wrongs they have done to society is not done just for the sake of retribution, most of these people have no right being out among ordinary people and some even wish to killed. The Death Penalty is in no way inhumane, it is death by lethal injection, we don't behead people and it is in no way cruel, or gruesome.

With less people occupying federal prisons we would have more room to get criminals off the streets, in an overcrowded prison, inmates with more serious crimes take precedence over less serious ones, if the case is too severe people can even be removed from the prison entirely and let out on parole. With the Death Penalty there would be not as much of a need to do this, and prisons would be much less overcrowded.

The Death penalty is in no way inhumane, nor is it killing an innocent person by any means. The Death Penalty removes people from society, who have no right being there in the first place, and it saves a vast amount of money that comes mainly from taxpayers, this money can then go to be used for other more important things. It's just not worth it to have these people among us, is it to you?